

 Children can explain how public transportation helps people get where they want to go.

 Children explore the types of public transportation around their community and the world. Children also build a "life-sized" cardboard bus to integrate what they have learned into their dramatic play.

 Transportation is a part of our daily lives, and vehicles often capture children's interest.

 Family members can suggest a field trip location, celebrate with children at the culminating event, and support children's learning while traveling on different types of transportation.

 Children explore public transportation in and around their community. Community partners are invited to the culminating event.
